

The Door

Once upon a time, there was a king who gathered all the scientists in the kingdom to find the best one. He asked them to open an enormous door. The king promised that the scientist who opens the door will work in a fabulous laboratory.

The first group of scientists said opening the door needed many years of study. The second group of scientists told the king that it was impossible to open such an enormous door.

Now, There was only one scientist left. He examined the door closely and touched it. Finally, he pushed the door gently. It opened. The king left the door slightly open.

Then the king exclaimed, "at last I have my scientist". He said a real scientist must be imaginative, decisive, and courageous.