

A lazy Rabbit

The events of the story revolve around a lazy rabbit who was in a, and went out to look for food as usual, but after a long search, the rabbits were unable to get all that they needed to eat.

The rabbits said that he was not getting enough food, so why did he become lazy and not look for food as actively as before?

The lazy rabbit replied that he did not want to work with them, and would leave them to go somewhere where he could get food and drink without effort, and that place was Uncle Job's farm.

While the lazy rabbit was walking to Uncle Ayoub's farm, one of the hunters approached him and wanted to catch him to eat, but he fell prey to a merchant man who managed to catch him during his escape.

The merchant imprisoned the lazy rabbit in a cage, and wanted to sell it in his trade. Indeed, he quickly sold it to one of the merchants in the shops. The rabbit felt that he would finally eat and drink without getting tired in this shop.

But with the passage of time, the rabbit found himself eating and drinking, but he was in a cage locked up, not going out to play or work, like all the other animals in the cages next to him, so he felt that he had lost his friends in the forest.

One day, the cage in which the rabbit was in rolled over and broke, so the rabbit was able to quickly get out of it.

and escape to return to the forest again because he found that the comfort is not in obtaining food and drink, but rather the comfort in his sense of freedom and hard work.