

The dinosaur

Dino was a cheerful and playful dinosaur who was loved by everyone. He spent his time singing and dancing, and he kept jumping and making antics.

He loved nature and, being aware of his enormous size, he took care never to harm anyone, not even a simple mosquito. One day, however, he crushed a pretty little flower that soon died. He hadn't done it on purpose, but a deep sadness took hold of him.

Days passed and Dino was more and more depressed and inconsolable. His friends, distressed to see him like this, decided to seek a solution, but they did not find it. Finally, a grasshopper thought of a very reasonable solution.

– If Dino is afraid of crushing flowers and small animals, let him walk on tiptoe. So it won't hurt anyone – she said with relief.

All accepted the locust's proposal, which seemed to them excellent; from that day on, Dino jumped and danced, standing on tiptoe. His sadness disappeared, he became again the happy and kind dinosaur that we had always known.
